An air lock is a contrivance by means of which communication is established between the open air and the interior of the cylinder, without permitting the surplus air to escape. It is made as tollows:

Through the cap of the cylinder pile, a cast iron semi-cylinder, six feet long and four feet in diameter, is inserted; two feet being above, and four feet below, the plate head or cap. In the top of the lock is a man hole with a valve opening downwards. In the plane side of the lock, near the bottom, is another man hole, with a valve door opening into the cylinder. It is used as follows: The workmen, tools and bags, are first passed through the man hole into the air lock chamber, and the valve door closed .-The cock into the pile cylinder is then opened, the dense air rushes into the air chamber, closes the outer door valve firmly, and causes the door into the cylinder to open. The workmen then descend by ladder to the bottom of the cylinder and shovel the pile sand into bags, which, when full, are passed into the air lock chamber. The door thereto being shut, the signal is given to the man on the outside, who opens the cock from the air lock to the open air, permits the dense air to escape, and the upper valve door falls open. WHAT treasures of art does this little room contain ?-Whichever way you turn, some immortal creation greets your eye. Here you can linger profitably for hours, contemplating the noblest of God's creation-man; here converse silently with the living and the dead, until the withered arm of memory seems again restored and strengthened, and reaches forth its hand to greet those with whom we were once intimately associated, but now inhabit the gloomy prison bouse of forgetfulness. Who would die without leaving so desirable a token of remembrance behind ? Here beauty, with its diversity of expression and features, glows forth from the plate with rapturous divinity, and fascinates the eye, until the heart worships them, not like the inimitable ringinly Angels, the sainted Madonna, or the blue-bearded Magdalene, but as the unapproachable Daguerrectypes of relatives and friends, made by Harrison. Visit his Gallery whether you wish one of his unequal-led pictures or not. Mr. H. is acknowledged to be the best

Daguerreotypist in the State. A VISITOR. Nov. 29th, 1853. IFE OF HAYDON .-- Life of Benjamin Robert Haydon, Historical Painter, from his autobiography and journals edited and compiled by Tom Taylor. This is a work of uncommon interest, describing the artistic career, the personal experience and the perpetual struggles and difficulties of the celebrated English painter, drawn from his own antobiographical narratives in part, and from his copious journals, with brief editoral comments to preserve the continuity of the story. Haydon was a decided original. His journals give a wide portraiture of the man, and are marked by a deep pathos They are full of anecdotes of celebrated men, and contain many valuable criticisms upon art. Haydon was in relations with the Duke of Wellington, Lord Brougham, Sir Robert Peel and other British Statesmen, of which he gives a variety of interesting reminiscences. His anecdotes Wadsworth Leigh Hunt, Keats, Shelly, Sir Walter Scott, as well as several cotemporary painters, are attractive features of the book, and make it pleasant reading.
